

In the mists of metropolis, God reveals his beauty

BOGOTÁ, Colombia — This isn't the view most people come to Monserrate to see.

That would be 180 degrees behind me — the city of Bogotá. From here at 10,397 feet, you can see planes taking off from the airport and watch the sun set over this South American metropolis of 8 million souls.

It's impressive. There's little doubt.

There's a Catholic shrine here that a lot of folks come to visit. Inside you'll find El Señor Caído, The Fallen Lord. It's a small statue, dating back to the 1600s, that depicts a weak, emaciated Jesus, lying on his side, struggling to rise. Perhaps it's a reference to the Catholic tradition that Christ fell three times on the way to his crucifixion. (Scripture doesn't tell us that — only that Simon of Cyrene was forced to carry Jesus' cross.)

My visit to Bogotá is the conclusion of a whirlwind trip across Latin America. I accompanied my wife, a pediatrician, on a medical mission trip to Guatemala before flying south to Colombia, where I visited a church-planting team in Cúcuta, a city on the Venezuelan border.

Pedro Villa graciously offered to host me on my stopover in Bogotá.

He's a fascinating guy — a native of Mexico who grew up in Texas after his dad was recruited to preach for some of the early Spanish-speaking Churches of Christ there. He's worked as a film producer and once was a missionary to Bogotá.

He's never forgotten his love for this city and its people, so last year he moved here. Now he works with the Northside Church of Christ, a small, middle-class congregation.

He sees potential for the churches of Colombia to be shining beacons of hope in busy, bustling cities where a lot of people acknowledge God but don't live out the truth of the Gospel.

Their lord, perhaps, is a fallen lord.

Pedro thought I should see Monserrate before I left Bogotá, so we took a cable car to the top. In between panoramic shots of the city, I noticed a rainbow in the mist behind me.

It got brighter — probably the most brilliant rainbow I've ever seen. It seemed so close. I could actually see through it. I could make out the trees on the mountainside, painted in brilliant yellow, indigo and red.

Most impressive. There's no doubt.

We build massive cities that we can view, in awe, from the highest heights. We carve images of the divine based on our limited understanding and make pilgrimages to see them.

But these are hollow reflections, a chasing after the wind, compared to the glory our Creator reveals to us through his creation.

Boy, am I glad I turned around.
